Digital Fusion Brand Book

Version 1.0 · 01 September 2026 · the steel identity

Digital Fusion is a prepaid AI assistant for South Africa. A person buys a bundle the way they buy airtime, asks anything in their own language, and sees what every answer cost the moment it lands. Everything in this document serves that one idea: the product is honest about money, so the brand is calm, precise and undecorated.

The values

Five commitments sit under everything the brand says and ships. They come from the product's own rules, so they are testable claims rather than slogans.

- Honest about money. Every answer shows what it cost as it lands, a balance can never go below zero, and nothing renews on its own.
- Prepaid, on purpose. Top-up is how South Africa pays for airtime, electricity and data. We treat it as the first-class way to pay for intelligence, never as the budget option.
- Answer first. Plain language in six languages, with the substance in the first reply and the caveat beside it. Never a lecture before the answer, and never a question the answer could have covered.
- Private by design. Conversations are never used to train a model, deletion schedules are visible in Settings, and a private chat leaves nothing behind anywhere.
- Built for real phones. The heavy lifting happens on our servers, so the product runs properly on an entry-level Android from 2017, in the hand it is actually bought for.

What sets it apart

Five claims no competitor in this market can make together, and each one is checkable in the product today.

- Prepaid AI, in rand. A R20 bundle bought like airtime, with no card, no subscription and no monthly debit order. The alternatives sell dollar subscriptions from about R149 to R324 a month.
- Two frontier AIs, one wallet. Claude and Gemini answer in the same app, chosen per question, spending one balance.
- All 11 official languages. The interface asks your language first and speaks it, and the assistant answers in whichever language you write.
- Every cost shown as it lands. Each answer shows what it drew, big jobs quote before they run, and a balance can never go below zero.
- Private chats that leave nothing behind. Kept nowhere, never used for training, erased when ended — enforced on the server, not promised in a policy.

The product

- A prepaid AI assistant for South Africa, on the phone and on the web.
- Claude and Gemini answer inside it, chosen per question, spending one balance.
- Bundles are Starter R20, Regular R50 and Heavy R120, each valid 30 days, and a newly verified number starts with a free grant.
- It searches the web when a question needs it, reads photos, writes documents and slide decks, runs deep research, and shops with live prices in rand.
- It answers in whichever of the 11 official languages the person writes, and the interface itself speaks all 11.

Who it is for

The free AI plans are the competition, so the brand speaks to the people the free plans fail (competitor pricing checked 28 August 2026):

- People who have hit the walls of the free tiers and will not sign a monthly subscription: lumpy income, a card they keep away from recurring charges, or one bad cancellation too many.
- People in the Claude gap. Claude Pro costs about R324 a month, in dollars, on a card that takes international recurring billing. R20 to R120, prepaid, in rand, sits in a space no competitor occupies.
- People reached through brands they already trust and pay, where a bundle rides on a balance they already hold.

The name

The product is Digital Fusion, two words, both capitalised. On the Apple App Store the listing is Digital Fusion AI (the plain name was taken by another account); the home-screen name is Digital Fusion. Never write DigitalFusion as one word, never abbreviate to DF in anything a customer reads.

The marks

The wordmark in white, for graphite, steel, or a photograph dark enough to hold it.

The app icon: the wordmark in graphite on a light steel-tinted ground, #F7F9FB falling to #DEE6EE.

The wordmark exists in exactly two colours: white on dark grounds, and graphite #1C2126 on light grounds, as on the icon. Clear space is the height of the FUSION capitals on every side. Never any other colour, outline or shadow, and never rebuilt in another typeface.

Colour

One rule holds the whole interface together: the money is the only colour. Chrome is greyscale, content is greyscale, and the single chromatic element is the credit figure, because what something cost is the one thing a person should never have to hunt for. Marketing surfaces may use steel more freely, but the closer a surface sits to the product, the more strictly the rule applies.

Graphite is the dark theme and the brand's home ground.

ROLE	VALUE	USE
 Ground	#191C20	The screen itself
 Surface	#232830	Bubbles, the composer, sheets
 Surface high	#2B313B	Raised elements
 Ink	#EEF1F4	Text
 Ink muted	#9AA3AD	Secondary text
 Ink faint	#697079	Placeholders, timestamps
 Steel	#6E9BC5	Money, and nothing else in the app
 Gold	#E0B75A	Credit held against an answer in flight
 Danger	#FF5A4E	Errors only

Paper is the light theme: the same shapes on a neutral off-white, with the accents darkened for contrast.

ROLE	VALUE	USE
 Ground	#ECEE2	The screen itself — deep enough that white surfaces stand off it
 Surface	#FFFFFF	Bubbles, the composer, sheets
 Ink	#1C2126	Text
 Ink muted	#676E76	Secondary text
 Steel, deep	#2E5E8C	Money on light grounds
 Gold, deep	#A3771D	Held credit on light grounds
 Danger, deep	#B3261E	Errors only

The identity moved from ember orange to steel on 01 September 2026, because charcoal, porcelain and a warm orange accent were the Claude app's exact trio. Steel shares no colour family with it, and sits closer to the icon's original brand blue.

Typography

Prepaid AI, priced per answer

ARCHIVO · HEADLINES AND DISPLAY · 600 TO 800

IBM Plex Sans carries running text on the web and in documents. Inside the app, text is set in the platform's own system face, which is what a reading surface on a budget phone renders fastest.

IBM PLEX SANS · BODY · 400 TO 600

R2 495,00 · 12 440 credits · 30 days

IBM PLEX MONO · MONEY AND FIGURES · TABULAR NUMERALS, ALWAYS

Two type rules from the product carry into every surface: 13px is the floor and nothing is set under it, and every column of figures uses tabular numerals so a balance does not shift width as it counts.

Voice

- South African English, and rand amounts written as R2495,00.
- The product answers in the language the person writes in, and the interface speaks all 11 official languages. Marketing follows the same manners.
- Answer first, then detail. Never a paragraph of throat-clearing before the substance.
- Money is always plain: what it costs, what it drew, what is left. Never bury a price in fine print.
- No hype words. The product claims what it does today, in numbers where numbers exist.

Partners and co-branding

Distribution partners appear in a dedicated strip labelled “Distributed by”, in their own brand colours, on a white or paper ground. Partner marks never appear inside the product interface, and the product never adopts a partner's colours. Current distribution partners: Clicks Connect, Absa and Digital Mobile.

Domains

The brand holds two domains: digitalfusion.co.za is the home market address, and digitalfusionai.com serves international traffic and mirrors the App Store listing name. Print the .co.za address on anything South African; the .com exists so the name is never a dead end.

The app stores

- Apple: listing Digital Fusion AI, bundle `com.dsg.vasai`, home-screen name Digital Fusion.
- Google Play: package `com.dsg.vasai`, adaptive icon: the graphite wordmark on light #F3F4F6.
- The splash screen is the wordmark on graphite #191C20, matching what the app opens to, so nothing flashes on first paint.
